Training in intercultural competence
for international students

17–21 August 2015

Join us at the University of Münster and experience the European Campus of Intercultural Perspectives. – Become a member of a multicultural student team and investigate aspects of intercultural competence.

Contact with people from other cultures at work and in everyday life is a common fact nowadays, a consequence of increasing globalisation and migration. Therefore intercultural competence has become an essential skill for all people involved, be it in working life abroad or in multicultural teams in one's home country. But what is intercultural competence? What is a culture shock?

What options are there to deal with intercultural misunderstandings? How does conflict resolution work? These questions and others aim to help anybody working in multicultural teams to foster the cohesiveness of the group.

Participants will come together for two sessions per day. After work, don't miss out on exploring the beautiful city of Münster!

The summer school will be held by “Ethnology in School and Adult Education” (ESE e.V.). This society is closely connected with the Institute of Ethnology and has 20 years of experience in intercultural communication.

Ethnology in School and Adult Education (ESE e.V.)

ESE is involved in diverse research projects, participates in congresses and publishes a broad spectrum of scientific articles. The scientific results obtained are conveyed to different target audiences, such as pupils participating in different school projects. Adult education consists mainly of trainings for people who need intercultural communication for their work, for daily life, or who are just interested in the topic. Please find further information at www.ese-web.de.

Dr. Sarah Eligehausen studied Biology at the University of Münster and finished her PhD in 2012 in the field of cardiovascular diseases. After graduation she worked as the responsible person for internationalisation at the faculty of biology of the WWU. In this context she was in charge of the mentoring programme for international students as well as of teaching in an international field. She also trained as a coach for intercultural communication at ESE. Since 2013 she has been working as trainer and lecturer for ESE. With her educational background, she focuses on intercultural communication in a scientific context.

Marcel Klapp studied Ethnology

at the University of Münster. For his master’s degree he conducted fieldwork at a community radio station in Kenya. His main research interests are religion and identity at the intersection of Visual and Media Anthropology. He is currently involved in the production of a documentary film on the ritual of the Alevi community from Anatolia. Since 2012 Marcel has been part of the ESE-team. He is working as a trainer for intercultural competence in adult education and as a lecturer for “Wann ist ein Mann ein Mann?” – a project on gender roles implemented in four schools in Münster.
